Leprosy (1): Whereabouts or burial position of ashes unknown

Scarlet Fever (2): Passengers and crew from the vessel "Elderslie", presumed first patients and contacts to use the buildings of the Quarantine Station.

Smallpox (3): William Miller was the first case of the 1893 smallpox epidemic. Fremantle Council objected to WPQS taking Perth victims, claiming it would bring the disease to Fremantle. Although the Fremantle Board of Health later moved that a proportion of WPQS be allocated as a burial ground for smallpox victims, many were buried in a new cemetery at Subiaco. Of 25 cases, 23 were nursed at the tent hospital at Subiaco.

Two Smallpox victims (1893 & 1894) presumed cremated, but no confirmed reports, and burial position of remains or ashes unknown.

 During WWII, Smallpox was described or referred to as either Typhoid, or Plague for security measures

Venereal Disease (4): Quarantine Station log entry dated 23rd April 1936, records 49 persons were accommodated in beach huts at Woodman Point after subsequently being diagnosed with secondary syphilis, rather than smallpox.

Whooping Cough (5): 226 Civilians and Military personnel from the vessel "Anna Robertson" that were originally quarantined on Carnac Island, but then transferred to the beach at Woodman Point because of contaminated drinking water.
